Human resources are the source of achieving competitive advantage because of its capability to convert the other resources (money, machine, methods and material) in to output (product/service). The competitor can imitate other resources like technology and capital but the human resource are unique. In the view of resource based theory of Barney (1991) stated that Human resources lead to competitive advantage when they are valuable, inimitable and well organized.HRM can help firms improve organizational behavior in such areas as staff commitment, competency and flexibility, which in turn leads to improved staff performance (Koch and McGrath, 1996).

INTRODUCTION:

Managing human resources plays key role in organizational success. The effective management of human resources requires sound Human Resource Management systems. In order to develop a sound HRM system, the organization should have effective Human Resource Management practices. HRM practices refer to organizational activities directed at managing the pool of human resources and ensuring that the resources are employed towards the fulfillment of organizational goals (Schuler & Jackson, 1987;

LITERATURE REVIEW:

Human resource management (HRM) refers to the policies and practices involved in carrying out the „human resource(HR)“ aspects of a management position including human resource planning, job analysis, recruitment, selection, orientation, compensation, performance appraisal, training and development, and labour relations (Dessler,2007). HRM is composed of the policies, practices, and systems that influence employees’ behavior, attitude, and performance (Noe, Hollenbeck, Gerhart, and Wright, 2007). Human Resource Management Practices have been changed dramatically during the last two decades owing to globalization, privatization/deregulation, competition and technological advancements. These highly turbulent environmental have forced organizations to adopt new workplace practices that enhance sustained level of high performance. Human Resource Management Practice underlines the importance of job satisfaction of employees.

The relationship between appropriate human resource management practice and positive employee attitudes including employee satisfaction, loyalty and productivity has been widely analyzed. It is also suggested that treating employees as a valuable asset improves their commitment and loyalty which leads to higher performance and quality (Silvestro, 2002).

Academic research conducted at the organizational level supports that human resource practices affect organizational outcomes by shaping employee behaviors and attitudes (Arthur 1994; Huselid 1995). Ostroff and Bowen (2000) found that human resource practices shape work force attitudes by moulding employees’ perceptions of what the organization is like and influencing their expectations of the nature and depth of their relationship with the organization. There is also a general notion that human resource practices interact with perceptions of organizational support to affect employee commitment. Researchers have over the years proposed countless varied lists of practices however; there is no agreement on what or which practice qualifies as an aspect of HRM (Beer et al 1984; Storey 1995; Guest 1997; Boselie et al. 2005).

It is interesting to note that there are still some practices that form the core of the various practices proposed. These include recruitment and selection, training and development, performance management and reward scheme, however, others such as job design and employee involvement are more sporadic and are yet to gain grounds in the HRM literature. Guest (1997) however puts forward seven practices namely, selection, training, appraisal, rewards, job design, involvement and status and security. However, the study focuses on six out of the seven practices in its analysis. Selection of the practices for study is based on its recurrence in the literature reviewed, its significance and measurability.
