ABSTRACT:

Epigraphy which simply means the study of old inscriptions is a special branch of palaeography. It is a branch of scholarship devoted to the study of written matter recorded on hard and durable material such as stone or metal. As many early civilizations have left behind many epigraphs, 'epigraphy is a prime tool in recovering much of the first hand record of antiquity'. The early cultures have used for epigraphy many materials like stone, metal, clay. Terra-cotta, pottery, wood, papyrus, parchment etc., and techniques like cutting, carving, engraving, embossing, scratching, painting, drawing and so on.

with separate minor edicts are scattered over India. His edicts mention the names of his western neighbours, whose dates are known to historians. Thus Asoka supplied the synchronism that are the sheet anchor to ancient Indian chronology.

INSCRIPTIONS OF SOUTH INDIA

Literature is almost the only source of our knowledge of the Sangam Age (c. 300 B.C to A.D. 300), though there are nearly 80 short cave inscriptions in Brahmi with the emergence of the Pallavas, epigraphy assumes a significant importance. We have nearly 30 copper plate grants of these Pallavas and a progressively increasing number lithic inscriptions on the walls of their caves as well as structural temples. Afterwards epigraphy attains a very high status in South India, and the entire period from 8th century A.D. to 16th century can be called the “Age of inscriptions” from the point of view of sources. Of the nearly 75,000 inscriptions long and short all over India commencing from the days of Asoka and coming almost to modern times, more than 60,000 are found south of the Vindhyas of which about 25,000 and more have been found in the Tamil country. Dynastywise they are as follows: Pallavas: 300; Pandyas: 4,000; Cholas: 10,000; Vijayanagar Kings: 3,000; minor dynasties (like Konkan rulers, Rashtrakutas, Hoysalas and Nayaks): 3,000; and miscellaneous records of private nature: 5,000.

PANDYAS INSRIPTIONS

Fixing the reign period of the Pandyas is a problem. From this point of view two inscriptions of the times of Jatila Parantaka Nedunjadaiyan are valuable the Anamalai Sanskrit inscription citing the Kali year 3871 (770 A.D) affords a date for him and the more important Tirupparankunram inscription on the lintel of the doorway of the Durga shrine citing the Kali year 3874 as the 6th regnal year of this king yields his year of accession as 767 A.D.

The Ayyampalayam inscription citing Saka year 792 as the 8th regnal year of Varaguna yield A.D. 862 as the initial year of Varaguna II. Though the Lithic inscription of the Pandyans after the 11th century are many, identification of the issuing king is a problem because these Medieval and the Imperial Pandyas had only six names after repeated. Vira Vikrama, Parakrama, Sundara, Srivallabha and Kulasekhara. Besides, often at a given period more than one Pandya with the same name and at times with the same cognomen- Maravarman or Jatavarma ruled the country.

Fortunately each king has a different initial poetic expression with which his Prasasti begins, e.g. Jatavarmavarman Sri Srivallabha (1014-31 AD)Jatavarma Sri Srivallabha (1101-24 AD Maravarman Sundara Pandya- I(1216-41 AD) and Jatavarmavarman Sundara- I(1251-83 AD).

The Imperial Cholas

The Cholas region has their richest crop of inscriptions perhaps in the entire nation. Out of about 400 temple-centres glorified in the hymns of Alvars and Nayanmars, about 250 are in the Chola region, mostly with inscriptions. Besides them, a number of new temples were built here during the heyday of the Cholas, almost all with many inscriptions. So now we have more than 10,000 of them in this region and they provide a lot of information about:-

1. The Chola Government
2. Territorial units (Mandalam, Valanadu, Kurram etc.)
3. Village assemblies (Sabha, Ur, Nagaram,Nadu) and their functions
4. Taxation and land survey
5. Social divisions
6. Trade organizations(e.g Nanadesis)
7. Judiciary crimes and punishments
8. Coinage, weights and measures
9. Education and colleges (e.g at Ennayiram, Tribhuvani, Tirumukkudal
10. Religious condition and so on.
Rajaraja I set the pace for historical information in his Prasastis. Copper Plates of the Imperial Cholas: At present six copper plate grants are found. In the present chapter Thirumananjcheri temple inscriptions are discussed. They are as follows:
